The Legend of the Pig

In the 19th century, railroad owner James J. Hill had a livestock farm where Tria is now. Legend has it that one of the workers had a pig named Morgan who was very smart. The pig was trained to do tricks like sit, rollover and fetch. The pig was loved by all, so he was the only animal allowed to sleep in the house.

One of Hill's daughters loved the pig so much, he decided not to start a pig farm. Because Morgan represented good fortune to the other pigs, he became a "good luck charm," and everyone started rubbing his belly for good luck. A statue was created in his honor, so that he could continue bringing good luck. The statue hasn't lost any of its luck-providing ability.
